INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA 46204-2797

EVAN BAYH
GOVERNOR
Greetings!

As Governor of Indiana, it is a pleasure to greet the Indiana School for the Deaf (ISD) students, staff, families, alumni and fans. The State of Indiana shares in your excitement as you celebrate your Sesquicentennial Homecoming this day, February 12, 1994.

The State of Indiana also sends a warm Hoosier welcome to our visitors from the American School for the Deaf as you join the Indiana School for the Deaf in this historic Homecoming celebration.

In this ISD's Sesquicentennial year, we honor IDS's founder, William Willard, for his efforts to provide an education to deaf Hoosiers since the founding of ISD on October 1, 1843. It was during the January 1844 legislative session that the State of Indiana recognized Willard's contribution to Indiana's educational system by assuming financial support for the education of Indiana's Deaf children and the State of Indiana has proudly supported ISD since that time.

As we reflect on ISD's history, we also honor Laurent Clerc for his leadership and inspiration which motivated William Willard to pursue the goal of educating the Deaf. Today's Sesquicentennial Homecoming is a tribute to the historical ties that join Laurent Clerc from the American School for the Deaf and William Willard from the Indiana School for the Deaf. These two men, Clerc and Willard, have had a tremendous impact on the education of the Deaf. The State of Indiana is proud to salute their contributions during this historic Sesquicentennial Homecoming.

Sincerely,

CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS

STEPHEN GOLDSMITH
MAYOR

Greetings:

As Mayor of the City of Indianapolis, it is my pleasure to welcome those attending the Indiana School for the Deaf's Sesquicentennial Homecoming.

Founded by William Willard in 1843, the Indiana School for the Deaf has maintained a long and proud history of service to our city, and has received national acclaim for its program for the deaf.

ISD shares a unique history with the American School for the Deaf. Both schools were founded by men who were deaf and were teacher and student. I commend both ISD and ASD for their commitment to serving the needs of their respective communities.

While visiting our city, please take the opportunity to sample the many cultural, historical, entertainment and sports facilities we have to offer. The citizens of our city join me in extending our warmest hospitality to you.

Sincerely,

Stephen Goldsmith

Dear Alumni, Staff, Parents, and Students of the Indiana School for the Deaf:

The American School for the Deaf is honored to participate in the celebration of the 150th Anniversary of the founding of the Indiana School for the Deaf. We look forward to good sportsmanship and exciting play in our basketball games, and we take great pride in knowing that one of our graduates, William Willard, was the Founder of the Indiana School for the Deaf.

Sincerely,

February 1, 1994

As Superintendent of the Indiana Deaf School (ISD), I welcome alumni, friends and families to Indianapolis and ISD. I would like to extend a special greeting to our guests from the American School for the Deaf (ASD), hoping that their visit will be memorable and filled with Hoosier Hospitality!

Early in the last century, a Deaf man name Laurent Clerc left his homeland, France, to accompany Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet to America to teach and train others to teach Deaf people. In 1817, with Gallaudet, he co-founded the American School for the Deaf in Hartford, Connecticut.

In 1827, a Deaf teenager from Vermont, named William Willard, entered the American School and became an eager student of Clerc's. Laurent Clerc instilled in Willard a challenge to share his education and opportunity with the Deaf citizens of America. It was that challenge that led Willard to establish the Indiana Deaf School in 1843.

One hundred and fifty years later, the 1993-94 ISD Basketball Homecoming brings together the two schools founded by these two notable Deaf men. This athletic event honors the symbolic relationship between the two schools at this sesquicentennial reunion.

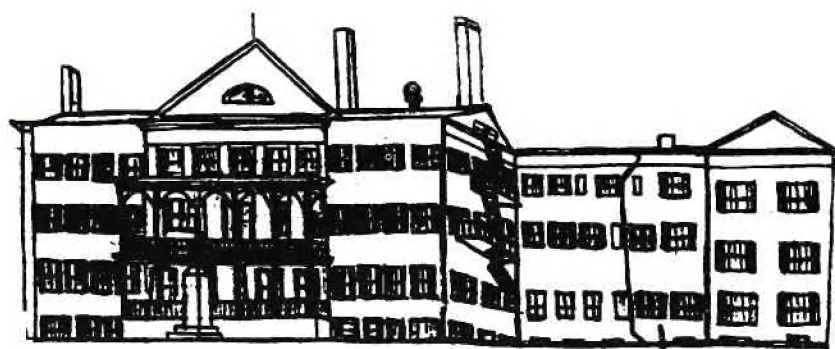

As we enjoy the athletic competition this weekend, may we be mindful of our Deaf forefathers, Laurent Clerc and William Willard, who conquered adversity to provide an education for all Deaf people in America.

Welcome ASD and alumni! Please enjoy your visit.

Warmly,

Eddy F. Laird
Superintendent

History of the American School for the Deaf

In 1807, a prominent Hartford physician, Mason Fitch Cogswell, wanted to do something for his two year old daughter, Alice, after she had recovered from spinal meningitis but had been deafened. Dr. Cogswell was a man of compassionate nature and in seeking some way to assist his daughter, he became interested in the cause of the Deaf in general. In 1812, a survey was made which showed there were at least 400 Deaf persons in New England. It was therefore decided to establish a school to teach the Deaf of this country.

On April 13, 1815 nine prominent men met at the home of Dr. Cogswell to take steps toward establishing a school. This would take money. They decided to canvass Hartford, then a bustling town of 6000 people. Imagine how delighted the men were when they were able to collect $2,133 from the townspeople in one day.

At the meeting, it was decided to send a representative to England for the purpose of learning the methods of teaching the Deaf. No one in the United States knew enough to direct a school. The mission of going to learn Deaf education was offered to Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet, who accepted the task. Mr. Gallaudet had already made some progress in teaching young Alice written words.

In England, Gallaudet met with little success, as the Braidwood School was operated for profit and those in charge were not willing to divulge their methods. Fortunately, he was invited to Paris by the Abbe Sicard, who placed his school, the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, at Gallaudet's disposal.

When Gallaudet returned to the United States, he brought with him a brilliant young French man, Laurent Clerc, who had been deafened in infancy. Educated by the Abbe Sicard, he had become an instructor at the school in Paris. Clerc proved to be invaluable in establishing the new school.

It took 52 days to reach America by ship. During the voyage, Clerc taught Gallaudet to sign and fingerspell; in turn, Gallaudet taught Clerc English. After their return, Gallaudet and Clerc spent some months visiting New England cities to gain support and interest in the new school. Their school for the Deaf was incorporated in May of 1816. The Connecticut General assembly appropriated $5000 to get the school started.

The school was called the Connecticut Asylum at Hartford for the Instruction of Deaf and Dumb Persons. On April 15, 1817, it opened in the Old City Hotel on Main Street. Alice Cogswell was the first pupil. The oldest was John Brewster, age 51, who had never been to school, but who was a talented portrait artist. Gallaudet was the first principal.

The school was successful from the start and grew rapidly. Pupils came from all over New England and other sections of the country. In 1821, the school moved to what is now known as Asylum Hill and remained there for 100 years, becoming the landmark "Old Hartford."

Land which had been granted to the school by the Congress was sold to finance this construction. This was a "first" for the school: federal funding of special education in the United States. At present, the school is located at 139 North Main Street, West Hartford, And is know as the American School at Hartford for the Deaf. It celebrated its 175th anniversary in 1992.

Louis Laurent Marie Clerc was born on December 26, 1785 in La Balme les Grottes, Dauphine, France. His father, Joseph Francois Clerc, was village mayor and justice of the peace. His mother, Elizabeth Candy, was the daughter of a notary public. The oldest sons of the Clerc family had held the office of King's commissary for over 300 years.

At the age of one year, Clerc fell into the fireplace and was burned on his right cheek. His name-sign among Deaf people came from the resulting scar- a brushing of the two forefingers tips on the right hand down the right cheek, near the mouth. Clerc's parents attributed his deafness and loss of sense of smell to the fever that followed. Clerc described himself as Deaf from birth.

At twelve years of age, Clerc was taken to the Royal National Institute for the Deaf in Paris by his uncle and godfather, Laurent Clerc, of Lyons. Clerc's first teacher and lifelong friend was Jean Massieu, a brilliant Deaf man whose five siblings were also born Deaf.

Within eight years, Clerc had completed the school's courses and was advanced to tutor. By 1816, he was teaching the highest class. Clerc and Massieu supported themselves by giving public exhibitions of their communication skills several times a week.

On July 10, 1816, Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet, a congregational minister from America was present in one of Clerc's exhibitions in London. Gallaudet had been sent by the citizens of Hartford, Connecticut to learn to teach Deaf people and to start a school in Hartford. He was invited to study at the Paris institution.

In Paris, Gallaudet was welcomed and taught by all. With funds running low, He realized he could not complete his mission; and he invited Clerc to return to the United States with him. Clerc agreed to come to America for three years to teach and train others to teach.

During the 52 days voyage to America, Gallaudet taught Clerc English, and Clerc tutored him in communication and teaching methods. After arriving in America and a period of travel to recruit students, on April 15, 1817, Clerc and Gallaudet opened a school in Hartford with seven pupils present in rented rooms.

Clerc became a well known man in America. He petitioned Congress for financial assistance for his school, making acquaintances with the Speaker of the House, Henry Clay and President James Monroe, (both of whom recognized him from their trips to London and Paris).

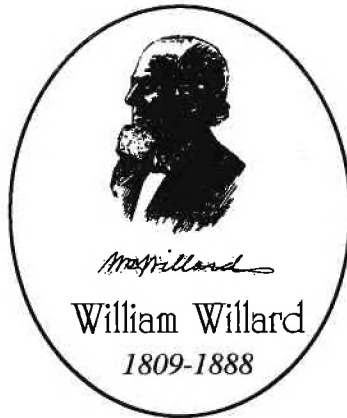

On May 3, 1818, Clerc married Eliza Crocker Boardman, one of his first pupils. Attractive, vivacious, and intelligent, she provided new incentive for Clerc to remain in America. He revisited France only three times, in 1820, 1835, and 1846.

The Clercs had six children, all with normal hearing, four of them survived infancy. The Rev. Francis Joseph Clerc was well known among Deaf people and an Episcopal clergyman. Guy Holt, a great-grandson, was president of the American School's board of directors until his death in 1965.

For eight months beginning in 1821, Clerc was acting principal of the Pennsylvania Institution in Philadelphia. He organized courses and trained the faculty. During his teaching career, Clerc trained many heads of Deaf schools. Many of Clerc's Deaf students founded schools or classes for Deaf persons in other states. One such student, William Williard, founded the Indiana School for the Deaf in 1843.

In 1858, at the age of 73, Clerc was retired with a pension after teaching half a century in two countries. His last years were spent peacefully. On July 18, 1869, a little more than a year after celebrating his golden wedding anniversary, Clerc died in his 84th year. He is buried beside his wife in Spring Grove Cemetery in Hartford, Connecticut.

William Willard was born November 1, 1809 in Brattleboro, Vermont. His father, Isaac Willard, had died two months prior to William's birth, while away on a trip to New Hampshire. His mother, Sarah Goodrich Willard reared William with his six siblings.

At six years of age, William became ill with spotted fever. Upon recovery from the sickness, it was discovered that William was Deaf. This was a difficult time of adjustment for William.

Upon hearing that a school for Deaf people had been established in Connecticut, William's mother enrolled him in the Hartford school. William was 17 years of age and very eager to learn. A very bright young man, William quickly benefited from instruction by his Deaf teacher, Laurent Clerc.

Willard spent two year in study with Clerc. He formed a close bond with Clerc and his classmates that would endure a life time.

After leaving the American school, Willard's first endeavor was to establish a private school for Deaf students in New York. Diligently working a trade full time while teaching, Willard's efforts failed due to the establishment of the New York Institution for the Deaf. Most of Willard's potential students enrolled at the New York school.

Willard accepted a teaching position at the newly organized Columbus Asylum for the Deaf in Columbus, Ohio. He would remain an instructor there for ten years. While in Ohio, Willard married a former student of the Columbus School for the Deaf, Elizabeth (Eliza) Young. Eliza, a native of Ohio, married William on September 17, 1839.

At the age of 33, with a wife and two children, William and Eliza left the Columbus school with the intentions of starting a school for Deaf people in Indiana where no school existed.

Willard traveled around the state on horse back seeking students and explaining his methods of instruction. After several commitments, William and Eliza Willard opened the Willard School on Oct. 1, 1843 in Indianapolis.

After a successful year of instruction, the state of Indiana voted to financially support the Willards' school. On Oct. 1, 1844, the Willards' school became the Indiana School for the Deaf.

The Willards had six children, all of them with normal hearing. Five daughters were educated at the M'Lean Seminary, married and bore children. The youngest and only son, William (Willie) was never married and died of cancer as a young man.

Willard became principal of the Indiana school when it became a state institution in 1844. He later remained as instructor, retiring in 1864.

William and Eliza lived more than 20 years in retirement. Their home was located across the street from the school. William made regular visits to the school, visiting his former colleagues and students.

Willard was a successful businessman, earning money from not only teaching, but from land and bond sales. He and Eliza had a comfortable life in Indiana.

On April 19, 1886, Eliza Willard died. William followed her in death on February 16, 1888. He was buried beside his wife in the Crown Hill Cemetery in Indianapolis.

History of the Indiana Deaf School

In Indiana prior to 1843, Deaf people had no educational opportunities. Upon realizing the need in Indiana for a school for its Deaf citizens, William Willard accepted the challenge of Laurent Clerc to educate the Deaf people of America by deciding to leave his teaching position in Ohio to move to Indiana with the intention of establishing a school for Deaf children. Having taught at the Ohio School for the Deaf for ten years, Willard packed up his family and journeyed to Indianapolis to begin his work to establish a school for Indiana's Deaf residents.

Willard traveled around the state of Indiana seeking students and demonstrating his methods of instruction. His efforts were fruitful. In October 1843, William and his wife Eliza Young Willard opened a semi-private school with twelve students in attendance. While the students' families were responsible for paying for boarding, they paid nothing for instruction.

The Willard School was located on the north side of Washington Street between Capitol Avenue and Illinois Street. Because of the rapid successes of the Willards' students, and the great need for an educational facility for the state's Deaf citizens, the General Assembly convening the following December, felt duty bound to take up support of the Willard School.

An Act of January 15, 1844 established the Indiana Deaf School. The state rented a large house located on the southeast corner of Maryland and Illinois Streets for the school.

Because of the expanding number of students, the state later sought more appropriate accommodations for its school. It secured a building on the south side of Washington Street between Delaware and Alabama Streets.

About the time of the most recent relocation of the school, a contest sprang up among various parts of the state as to who should have the permanent location of the school, the rivalry was primarily between Bloomington, the seat of Indiana University and Indianapolis. Indianapolis was finally chosen with grounds being selected just east of the city and buildings erected.

On October 2, 1850, the seventh annual session of the school began in the new quarters, on the southeast corner of State and Washington Streets with 141 pupils being in attendance. The school remained at its location on State Street until October of 1911 at which time it moved into its new spacious quarters at the present location on Forty-Second Street.

The Indiana Deaf School is the first state supported Deaf school in the country to implement a bilingual and bicultural philosophy. This philosophy promotes the use of ASL, the sign language of Deaf people in the United States. The philosophy also teaches students to read and write English as a second language and helps students with the propensity to speak English through training. Bilingual and bicultural education further develops the students sense of identity and pride in the culture and heritage of Deaf people while promoting an understanding and collaboration among all cultures.

Bringing injured athletes back to top performance

From many years of mountain climbing, David Carter's ankles were twisted, weak, and torn. After having one ankle repaired at Methodist Sports Medicine Center through reconstructive surgery, he made this trip to the top of Mt. McKinley. After the other ankle was reconstructed, he climbed 27,000 feet up Mt. Everest, the world's highest.

No athlete wants to be told an injury means the end of his or her athletic career. That's why, at Methodist Sports Medicine Center, we do all we can to get athletes back to top performance. From our years of experience and research, we can recommend the treatment, surgery, or rehabilitation program best suited to a particular injury. Then for most athletes, the sky's the limit!
